Education Crossing's Main Hub, Employment Crossing, Joins Social Networking Site MySpace

September 24, 2007

Pasadena, CA—With social networking sites quickly becoming the future of connecting with everyone and anyone online, Employment Crossing (www.employmentcrossing.com), Education Crossing's (www.educationcrossing.com) primary affiliate, has launched a profile on MySpace (www.myspace.com) to further reach its audience.

Now Employment Crossing members and non-members can easily access all of the latest updates and news Employment Crossing's sites have to offer while they browse their daily MySpace messages and comments. Bulletins about newly added site features and jobs as well as blog postings reporting newly added articles will allow friends of Employment Crossing to quickly and easily link to what's happening on the site in real time.

Employment Crossing has thousands of members and non-members who are already visiting its various Crossing sites multiple times per week. Employment Crossing's MySpace page will give users another route to access what its sites have to offer.

"Millions of job seekers and professionals from all industries are on MySpace," said CEO A. Harrison Barnes. "We're bringing Employment Crossing to the community on a site that many people already visit on a daily basis. We want Employment Crossing to be that much more accessible to our users and potential users."

More importantly, Employment Crossing on MySpace will also allow students and professionals to connect with one another. Employment Crossing friends can meet and share the latest industry information and news, which will provide invaluable opportunities for networking.

Furthermore, Employment Crossing on MySpace will open new lines of communication between the site and its audience. Friends of Employment Crossing can post comments about Employment Crossing's sites and their experiences using them. Employment Crossing friends can also utilize the profile to submit article ideas, site feedback, and questions they have about the job-search site's services.

Employment Crossing, which features more than 25 industry-specific career websites and job boards with massive and ever-expanding collections of jobs, was founded in April of 2007 and is quickly becoming a job-seeking staple in many professionals' careers.
