

Why Use MBA Resume Distribution Services?

Looking for a professional level job can be a difficult and demanding task. It requires a lot of research, and sending out large numbers of resumes and cover letters, which often never receive a response. If you're frustrated by the process of professional job searches, you may be able to benefit from using a resume distribution service.

There's a lot of competition out there for the easily found jobs, but there are also plenty that go undiscovered. That's because no one job source online is complete. It takes a dedicated database to collect all the available jobs that you're qualified for. While you could do this yourself, it would require you to spend valuable time on the task - time you could be using sending out applications, resumes, and letters.

When you hire a resume distribution service, you'll have access to an existing database containing thousands of employers, and millions of jobs. These include positions in any area of practice, and in just about any location you might want to work in. It doesn't matter how many employers you want to search - you'll be able to do it by using a service of this type.

Experts have said that as much as seventy percent of your success in hunting for a professional position depends on properly marketing yourself and getting an interview. Only about thirty percent is based on your ability, education, and work history.

That means that it's important to mail a high enough volume of resumes and cover letters to get the results you're looking for. However, blindly mailing to any position you might be qualified for is a poor choice. You'll need to have a high quality resume and a targeted cover letter, plus it's important to know where to direct your mailing.

An MBA resume distribution service helps you accomplish this. Using the service's resources, you'll be able to find the employers you should target, formulate the perfect resume and cover letters, and send out the volume that's needed to land the job. Many employers never even advertise positions, so this sort of targeted mailing is important if you want to get the job.

Of course, it's important to find a service that offers the quality you require. A good resume distribution service should have a database containing an enormous number of hiring contacts. They should be able to access appropriate people from just about any organization, corporation, or other group that might have the job for you, both locally and internationally.

Confidentiality is also important. Make certain that the service you hire will keep all communication completely confidential - otherwise, your personal information could be in danger. Discuss your needs, background, and abilities with a consultant, who will help you find out what your options are, and what your best market will be. Remember that you can ask questions, and you should if you're confused about anything.

Once your interview is over, a quality resume distribution service should begin to prepare resumes, cover letters, and even envelopes for the number of employers you've decided upon. These cover letters should be addressed specifically to the hiring authority of your potential employer - the more specific, the better. Look for quality laser printing and high quality paper and envelopes. It's important to make a good impression.

A big part of making the right impression involves personalizing your cover letters and resumes. That means that you should personally sign each letter, and address each envelope. This removes the chances of your resume looking as though it's part of a blanket mailing.

The cost of using resume distribution services varies, depending on the extensiveness of the job search required. Avoid companies that don't spell out their charges in detail. Many will offer a reduction in price as you send a greater volume of resumes and cover letters, making it even more beneficial to send to as many potential employers as possible.

Make sure that your envelopes will be sent directly to you before being mailed. This may seem unnecessary, but it allows you to personally review each and every one of them before they're sent out. This prevents any incorrect information from making it to an employer, and allows you to be certain that the resumes and cover letters you're sending into the world are the way you want them.

A good resume distribution service will follow up with you after the mailing, as well. They'll make sure that your progress is continuing as expected, and that you're satisfied with the service you've received. Remember that some of your letters may come back due to difficulties in mailing. Your resume distribution service should give you new, corrected envelopes, or refund you the cost of the originals. You should never pay for a service you don't receive.

If there's a job out there, the only sure way to find it by sending your resumes to the broadest possible audience. There's no complete list of job openings since many of them are never even advertised. Sending your resumes to a well targeted list of potential employers is the best way to make sure you get the job you need.

While it's possible to do this alone, you'll waste valuable time, and you're unlikely to reach every job there is available. That's because just one person can't possibly send resumes to every potential employer. Instead, use a resume distribution service, such as MBA Authority, to make sure that you have the right resumes, well targeted cover letters, and that you reach the audience you need to.

Hiring resume distribution services puts your job search in the hands of qualified professionals, and improves your chances dramatically. If you're frustrated with the job search process, take a little time to investigate your options. You'll be surprised by what resume distribution services have to offer you.
