

ProjectManagementCrossing Doubles Its Job Count within Two Months of Launch

February 13, 2008

Pasadena, CA — Since its launch in December, ProjectManagementCrossing has doubled its number of job listings, bringing its current total to more than 15,000.

“Our staff is making great progress with the site every day,” said CEO A. Harrison Barnes. “Just this past week we added more than 3,000 jobs. There is a myriad of untapped jobs in many niche industries — like project management — and we plan to get ahold of all of them so we can share them with our users.”

ProjectManagementCrossing charges its users a monthly fee of $29.95 to access its growing collection of job listings. This fee pays for its team of researchers, programmers, and other staff members to hunt down, edit, format, and post every single project management job they can on a daily basis.

Additionally, students are able to access ProjectManagementCrossing’s supply of jobs for free while they are in school. This means that students can find internships and jobs without spending a dime on the service.

In addition to its fast-growing assortment of jobs, ProjectManagementCrossing features weekly articles that report on project management trends and offer industry-specific advice.
