January 27, 2009

Pasadena, CA — RetirementCrossing, an affiliate of EmploymentCrossing, was launched recently exclusively for consolidating each and every job for retired professionals in all career fronts. The site offers all types of jobs which can be done by professionals even after retirement along with different advancement opportunities too. There are numerous possibilities for jobs on the Internet and this site will help explore most of the possibilities.

“Thousands of people are using the Internet and do odd jobs to make a full-time living. RetirementCrossing offers a nice supplement to your retirement income from specialized jobs. This site is well organized to help you get the necessary information to make an intelligent decision about the possibility of using the Internet to earn income after your retirement,” says A. Harrison Barnes, the Founder, and CEO of RetirementCrossing.

According to a Forbes report, the first of the 76 million or so baby boomers who will be reaching their retirement age of 62 in the next two decades are retiring prematurely. If all of them decide to stop working when they hit the milestone, businesses will have to struggle to fill in the gaps, since the succeeding generation of workers is much smaller.

Despite the looming recession, analysts agree that there will always be a need for workers who are eager to earn and do not mind to put in extra efforts. Additionally, nursing and tax preparation are said to be the hottest jobs for retirees. Jobs for retirees span many industries and are often integral to many businesses to earn profits.

“There are astonishing numbers of jobs for retirees out there. We want to find them all. But the source of the job is very much important so that one does not get flummoxed in the long run,” Barnes says.

RetirementCrossing charges $29.95 a month to view its job-opening research. As part of the site’s launch, however, RetirementCrossing is offering a free, seven-day trial to allow job seekers to familiarize themselves with the service.
